Raffles or drawings are considered gambling under the laws of the State of Arizona unless one of the following options is utilized:

Option A - Recruitment materials may not reference any compensation. Consent materials, however, must address whether any compensation will be provided because this is a required element of consent. Consent materials must also clearly state that participation in the research is not required in order to participate in the drawing. A method for participants to decline participation in the research but to enter into the drawing must be provided to all participants before any participants enter into the research.

Option B – If recruitment materials state there is compensation in the form of a raffle or drawing, those recruitment materials also must state:

1. Participation in the research study is not required;
2. Entries are limited to one entry per person - subjects under age 18 must have written consent from a parent or lawful guardian; and
3. Participation is void where prohibited by law

Please remember:

- Money paid out of the investigator’s pocket is still considered gambling
- Giving or risking something of value is an essential element of “gambling;” without that element the conduct does not fall within the definition of gambling
- Experiments involving the ‘ultimatum game’ do not constitute gambling, provided that neither of the players are asked or required to give or risk something of value